Greg McKelvey's Portraits

Greg McKelvey took pictures daily at the Scottsdale convention of the AAPA with his high resolution digital camera and long zoom lens which were clearly superior to what I could take with my little Canon digital camera which had 3X optical zoom. He shot across the room and was able to fill the frame with head-shots, most of which were superb. My opinion? Yep, and I wish to include a few here so you can check them yourself.

Greg has a photographic eye, doesn't he! He burned them to a CD-R. I had placed an order for a disk, the cost of which barely covered the cost of the disk and postage – a real bargain. I copied the pictures to my hard drive and used my favorite photo editing/managing program, ACDSee and optimized the color of each, and cropped judiciously whenever I felt it was needed. I saved the modified files in a form that reduced the original enormous file-size to a more manageable size. I then inserted in this small e-journal, using MS Word, probably the most popular word processor extant. Anyone with a PC or Mac and a word processor could easily create a journal like this.
